

Death of Lydia Deer.
Edwin Forrest, the tragedian, followed this evening, Dec. 3d, while dressing at his residence on North Broad street, successor of Mr. Carr.

A Tough Customer.

A day or two ago a gentleman dressed in the height of fashion, on whose immodest bosom sparkled a sum of the first water, the off window of whom was called to its aid a gold-colored cigarette, and all that sort of thing, you know, with a magnificent nod of head, addressed the staid but resolute agent at one of our city offices, saying this as follows:

Traveler.—Ah! my friend; I am seeking for a dealer in permits which several to me in course of transit the formalities of passage. Where will I find one who traffics in such permits?

Urbane Agent.—Permit? You will find them at the Cutout-house, sir.

T.—You understand or misconstrue my meaning. I am seeking a certificate of release from indebtedness to a transit corporation.

U. A.—Old Sir. You can get a release at some lawyer's office, nor the Court-house, or, if you want a corporation transit, you had better apply to the City Surveyor.

T.—Not so. Let me consider my meaning more perspicuous. I am earnestly seeking a public agency for the disposal of those printed authorities, in consideration of the possession of which the bearer is entitled to proper accommodation and transportation from the point where such purchase is made to the farther limit of the authority so bestowed for.

U. A.—Now I see it. If you want a Public Agency, Grant's your name.

T.—Aha! you grow fidgets. At this rate I shall never again reach the dominions of that dear wife whose smile is at this moment—

U. A.—Oh,兄弟! you want to go home, eh? Have you been long from Frankfort?

T.—Fortunately, forever. I much need a printed evidence that I have reimbursed some truly authorized agent in an amount sufficient to carry me from this point along the poetic course of the beautiful. Oho! to where it leaves the wharves of that city known to fame as Porkopolis, and thence to the hub of the Union so lately devastated by the foul hand of fame. What amount of the currency of the realm is required to cancel such an obligation?

U. A.—Now you're talking sense. Twenty-seven dollars—Mail Line steamers to Cincinnati, all rail thence to Boston. Bang went the stamp, out came the change, and as the kindly trawler turned to open the door, he looked back, and with a comical leer, remarked in a very natural tone, "Why the devil didn't you say so before?" On inquiry it proved to be R. ——, the comedian.

A Fashionable Woman's Prayer.

Dear Lord, have mercy on my soul, and please let me have the French salin that I saw at Stuart's this morning, for with black lace flounces and overskirt, that dress would be very becoming to me, I know.

If you grant me my request, please let me have a black shawl also, dear Lord. I need before this to-night, feeling perfectly happy, for Mass. Mass has sent me house such a lovely bouquet!

A heavily lined compound of white satin, with coral ostrich tufts. For this favor I am feeling very grateful. Give me, I pray these, an humble heart, and a new green silk with point lace trimmings. Let me not grow too fond of this vain and deceitful world, like other women, but make me exceedingly gentle and aristocratic. When the winter fashions come, let them set my style of beauty, and let there be plenty of ruffles, ruffles and flounces for I have them all very dearly. Bless my children, and please and them a good nurse, for I have neither the time nor inclination to look after them myself. And Lord, take care of me while I sleep, and keep my watch over my diamonds. Amen.

new closely men read the papers. We never say anything that anybody don't like, but we soon hear it, and everybody tells us of it. If, however, once in a while, we happen to say a good thing, we never hear of that; nobody seems to notice that. We must pay some man a hundred compliments, and give him a dozen puffs, and he takes it as a tribute to his greatness; and he never thinks it; never thinks it does him any good. But if we happen to say things that man don't like, or something that he imagines is a reflection on him or his character, we know quick he flares up and gets mad about it. All our evils are duly charged to us, but we never, apparently, get any credit for what good we do.

WANTERSERUS Irving was the author of the phrase, "The Almighty Dollar."

He used it in a sketch entitled "The Crook Village," published in 1837, and it quickly passed into universal usage.

He himself says of it: "This phrase,
